8 Land art project

At land art, works of art are created in the midst of nature from found objects of nature. They present themselves only to those who go out into nature. In the end they pass away and thus become part of nature again, back to what they once were. Land art is art in nature and in harmony with nature.

The material for the transformation is found on site: wood, stones, earth, plants and more. Newly arranged, small works of art are created in the landscape without disturbing or even destroying nature. The installations in the landscape are always based on a discovery - the discovery of an idiosyncrasy

21 Drum event

In the archaic structures of drum music there is indeed an enormous potential, which can be used in many ways.

For example, the study of drum music is an excellent way to stimulate and make visible constructive processes in teamwork.

At the same time, drumming also has a simply loosening effect and can be seen as an ideal complement to the often rather intellectual components of a group session.

Together you build a protective cover for an egg that has to survive a fall from a height. Next you will shoot blowguns and finally you will have a modern treasure hunt with the avalanche transceiver.
